

Believe it or not, many of our (best) referrals come from insurance adjusters.

In the world of personal injury, there's a popular perception of an "Us and Them" factor between injured parties and their insurance companies.

That's the kind of challenge that many insurance companies face these days with every case. And one of which many adjusters are constantly aware.

At Thomson, Rogers, we know that this perception is nowhere near as prevalent as it seems. And we know this because we receive a great many personal injury case referrals from adjusters like you. You have assessed the situation as professionally as your clients expect you to. But that same level of professionalism tells you that the victim is entitled to just compensation. And that achieving this is much more likely when the victim has an experienced and dedicated personal injury firm representing his or her interests.

Over the years, we have consistently managed to achieve fair and equitable settlements for our personal injury clients. And this has helped us earn and maintain the respect of everyone involved in our cases. Even the defendants.

Thomson, Rogers. We're here to help.
